Scope and Contents

The Old Document Project is a composite collection of some of the Windsor Historical Society's primary documents. It contains nearly 3,000 items dated from 1640 to 1939 and a handful of holdings from the mid-late 20th century. Each has been indexed by date, name, and document type.

The collection contains land records such as deeds, land grants, quit claims, leases, and surveys. Business documents include small account books, bills, payments, and receipts. A wide variety of legal documents include court summons, complaints, arrests, tax documents, insurance policies, and promissory notes. A significant portion of the collection pertains to the settlement of estates with documents such as wills, inventories, and probate records. There are Town of Windsor contracts for road work and school teachers as well as lists of district school pupils. Early military documents include orders, commissions, and regimental lists, while miscellaneous personal records include genealogies and single pieces of correspondence. Other items can best be described by their format – notes, signatures, calling cards, minutes, and sermons. Photographs, however, were not included in this project.

Project Administrative History

Windsor Historical Society has collected hundreds of historic documents since its founding in 1921. Some have been received as part of specific named collections; for others the provenance is uncertain. In 1997 an extensive project was begun to gather these documents together in order to preserve, record, and index them. Each item was placed in a protective sleeve, the sheets filed in loose leaf notebooks, and basic identifying information abstracted. Fields included the identifying number, date, document type, name, and a brief description. By early 2000, volunteers were entering this information into a database, and in 2005 these files were converted to a Microsoft Excel spreadsheet.

Many hands were involved in this extensive project. Over 100 document types were identified. Some effort has been made to standardize terms during file cleanup, but a controlled thesaurus of document types has not been defined. When a document had more than one significant name associated with it, multiple entries were made to the database in order to index each name. The handwriting was difficult to decipher at times, and variations in spelling and interpretation occurred during the transcription.

It is expected that further documents will be added to this collection as they are acquired or transferred from other files. The index will be updated periodically to make these supplementary materials accessible.

Arrangement

Although there are some short sequences of related items, documents were not placed in the collection in any particular order. They were given an identifying number that reflects the notebook volume and page number.

How to Research the Old Documents Project

Documents have been indexed by last name of significant subjects, date, and document type. If several significant names are represented in the record, multiple entries were made into the database. For example, the deed recording a land sale from Oliver Hayden to Walter Thrall would have two entries, one with "Hayden, Oliver" in the name field and another with "Thrall, Walter" listed there.

Often (but not always) the names of witnesses or other signatories were indexed, and additional names may have been included in the brief descriptive note. Justices of the Peace are generally not indexed, and only sometimes included in the description (indicated by the notation "JP").

Terms used to describe the document were generally expressed in the single form of the word, for example, "letter" not "letters."

In an effort to conserve space, the brief descriptions often included abbreviations and shortened forms of words. Extensive efforts have been made to expand these abbreviations during the data cleanup and to impose more uniformity in terminology. To search in this field, make creative use of synonyms or keywords to express a concept or just enter the first few letters of the word. For example, if you are looking for "student" try "school" or "scholar" or even just "sch" and for documents about ships try "boat" or "cargo."
