Oral History Spotlight: Al Ilg

This is a regular column for the one-on-one oral history interviews conducted by Sulema DePeyster, our Community History Specialist. Each article will feature the story of a Windsor resident and provide highlights from the interview, giving readers an inside look into the discussion that took place.

For many longtime Windsorites, the name Albert Ilg undoubtedly rings a bell. With over three decades of service under his belt, Al is Windsor's longest serving town manager to date, serving from 1966 to 1998. Our two-part interview comprised a total of four hours, with topics ranging from his childhood to his impressive career and eventual retirement. Given the sheer number of visible changes implemented throughout his tenure, it is clear that Al Ilg had a considerable impact on the Windsor you know today.

Born in 1933, Al spent the first 12 years of his life living in New York City. His parents immigrated to the U.S. from Germany in the 1920s, and his father was previously drafted into the German army during World War I. After arriving in the U.S., his father became a chef at the Waldorf Astoria Hotel. He eventually opened his own restaurant in Manhattan, two blocks away from the hotel. His mother often worked as a cashier at their restaurant.

His family moved to Bloomfield, New Jersey in 1945, and he graduated high school in 1950. Al then attended Bucknell University in Pennsylvania with an initial interest in the sciences. In his junior year, however, he took a political science course and discovered his passion for public service and history. This led Al to pursue an undergraduate degree in political science and eventually he earned his masters degree in Join us at the historic Chaffee House from 1-4 p.m. on February 25th for our newest exhibition: Inspiring Equal Participation: Windsor Afro American Civic Association. Established in 1982, the Windsor Afro American Civic Association (WAACA) was dedicated to serving the town's growing Black population and focused on the "enhancement and facilitation of equal participation within all aspects of the political, social, and economic processes within the Windsor community." Based on over a dozen oral history interviews with former members and associates of the organization, this exhibit tells the WAACA story through the words of those who were directly involved. You won't want to miss it!

Show date: February 26th

OUR MISSION

Windsor Historical Society invites people to connect with Windsor's evolving history by preserving, interpreting, and sharing our community's artifacts and stories.

So, where are we now?

In February 2023 I'll have had the honor of serving as your director for three years. It doesn't seem possible that time has sped by so quickly, a product of both my own aging and the true joy it has been to be a part of Windsor Historical Society every single day during this period! So, you may ask, after three years, where are we now?

It's important to note that the COVID-19 pandemic arrived just two weeks after I did, and has had no small impact on this time. While I really never experienced "normal" here at WHS, thanks to each of you and our great staff, we created our own "normal." We very deliberately forged ahead despite the pandemic with programs, strategic planning, new staff members, the centennial, and have not looked back. We did, of course, have to make allowances for the pandemic. We began virtual programs, trotted out the face masks, and said goodbye to school field trips and other in-person museum visitors for a few years. But thanks to you, the train kept moving forward and, I might say, actually increased speed in some ways. How so?

A few recent examples:

❖ We've made progress on our commitment to inclusion in significant ways. Having a written Inclusion Action Plan is good, but actions always speak louder than words. Increasingly, we have been

"walking the talk" through our programs and exhibits, board and staff recruitment and training, and community relations. The Society was named a "Windsor Bridge Builder" two years in a row, for its contribution to human relations.

❖ This past summer, a group of community members met here to consider and advise on how we might transform the venerable Chaffee House into a community cultural resource. The Chaffee Exploratory Committee suggested that the house may become a "place where the community's stories live" that includes interactive exhibits, places to record and share stories, as well as community- and student-curated exhibits and activities, to name a few. Stay tuned for much more on this in coming months!

❖ We've just appointed the first-ever student representatives to our Board of Directors. Highlighted in this newsletter, you will meet Windsor High School students Skye Raymond and Noah Lappen. In November they took seats as voting members of the board to bring the vital perspective of Windsor's youth to the table and to shape our future programs.

❖ In-person programming is picking up as well – over 2,300 people have participated in Society programs and events so far in 2022 – more than any time in the past 15 years! Summer visitation, while still lower than normal, was up by 30% over last year, and our staff and volunteers have served over 340 researchers and library visitors since January. We are still not back to normal, but these are astounding numbers nonetheless!

And yes, the school children are returning, gradually. Last spring we hosted every fourth grader from South Windsor Public Schools, and this year we hope to bring Windsor students back again for the first time in four years as well.

❖ On February 25th, we will open our newest exhibit featuring the Windsor Afro American Civic Association, the outcome of several years' efforts by our community historian Sulema DePeyster in collaboration with UCONN, local residents, and many others. You won't want to miss this!

There's much more of course, and none of this would be possible without your dedication and generous support. So while it's been a challenging three years for some, it's been a great three years for Windsor Historical Society, thanks to you!

“Second Hand in the First Town” Tag Sale Fundraiser Brings Strong Returns!

One person's trash is another person's treasure, so they say, and this was certainly true this fall! Thanks to a fantastic planning committee led by Colette Yeich and supported by over 70 dedicated volunteers, the Society's “Second Hand in the First Town Tag Sale” fundraiser concluded successfully. Over 140 donors contributed mountains of saleable merchandise which attracted almost 1,000 shoppers (including 93 early birds who paid $10 each to get “first dibs”) during the four-day event. In the end, we grossed over $14,000 to support Society programs and operations. We expect to run the tag sale fundraiser every two years, so look for the next one in fall 2024!

public administration from the University of Pennsylvania.

Al married Jackie Jolly in 1955, and they traveled to Arizona by car for Al to begin his internship with the city manager of Phoenix. He made a strong impression there, and this resulted in a six-month extension of his internship. In June of 1956, Al joined the Navy. His home base was in Newport, Rhode Island, and he was stationed aboard the USS Cascade. "My time in the Navy was very [challenging]," Al stated in his interview. "The ship had 600 sailors on it, and about 12 line officers or so. We had a very large crew."

Despite the long hours and difficult work that came with being in the Navy, Al still enjoyed the experience overall. Even so, he did take issue with the organizational structure of the Navy. "There was such a bifurcation between the officers and the enlisted," he explained. In his opinion, the Navy failed to realize that the enlisted ranks were capable of excellent quality work. For this reason, and because he wanted to continue learning as a city manager, Al concluded his time in the Navy after three years of service.

His next destination was Oak Ridge, Tennessee, as an assistant city manager. Established in 1942, Oak Ridge was a secret city operated by the federal government until 1949. The city was created for the purpose of enriching uranium needed to build the atomic bomb and therefore was not on the map. As assistant city manager, he worked alongside a few other colleagues to hire 250 local government employees over the course of a year. He also assisted in developing Oak Ridge's economy, which was virtually nonexistent due to the government's ownership of the city. Drawing new businesses to the formerly secret city proved to be a difficult task given the competition from other communities.

Al worked in Oak Ridge for six years before assuming his duties in Windsor, and he noted that Windsor was the only town in the northeast he applied to. This was because out of all the jobs he interviewed for throughout the country, the town council in Windsor most impressed him. He also admired the work of former Windsor town manager Robert Weiss and wanted to continue his legacy of economic development.

Al began as Windsor's town manager in 1966, and the industrialization of Day Hill Road is one of his major accomplishments. He recognized the potential of the tobacco fields in Windsor and how that would fit into the economic development program. Fueled by the possibilities, he worked alongside the town council and community members to transform the Day Hill Road area into the bustling business district it is today. "We brought in a number of companies with a streamlined development review. The proposal was [to] offer the owners of the building an estimate of how much taxes we would get in their first three years, and we would waive that. But we would use that number to see about putting public improvements to serve their buildings." Some of these public improvements included the installation of sewage lines and newly paved roads. The three-year plan successfully stimulated the town's economy by funding a multitude of new businesses. This led to a significant increase in job opportunities for Windsor residents.

In 1974, the Town of Windsor, led by Mayor John Welch and the International Association of Machinists (IAM) joined together to create a new form of health services in Connecticut. Using grants from the federal government, a medical center was built in East Hartford for residents of the surrounding communities. Throughout this process, Al served as chairman for the board of the North Central Connecticut Health Maintenance Organization (HMO) until 1982.

Constructing school buildings was another one of the town's big tasks during his time as town manager. "We had so much to do when I got here. We had to build Sage Park [Junior High], then we built a school out on Kennedy Road. Then we built a big addition to the high school, and we closed L.P. Wilson [Junior High] because the Black community was in the south part of the town. We [Windsor Board of Education, town council, etc.] all felt that having two junior highs, L.P. Wilson and Sage Park, was not what we wanted because it would keep people apart. And so we purposely closed L.P. Wilson, gave it to the town, and put the elderly in there." Closing L.P. Wilson Junior High contributed to Windsor's compliance with Connecticut's racial balance law, which was introduced in 1969 to combat de facto segregation in schools.

The extensive list of Al Ilg's achievements does not end there. In fact, he hired Maxie Patterson, Windsor's first Black police chief and one of the first in New England. He also recruited the state's first female police officers. In terms of Windsor's infrastructure, Al contributed to the development of Northwest Park and the "very contentious" expansion of Interstate 91, as stated in his own words. The proposed additions to I-91 and I-291 drew criticism from residents and the local government alike. In addition to the threat of raised taxes, opponents believed that construction would negatively impact the Wilson area of Windsor through increased traffic and decreased property values. However, the town signed an agreement with the Connecticut Department of Transportation in 1985 that allowed construction to commence. As he reflected on the matter in present day, Al understood the controversy while also recognizing the actions needed to end the ongoing debate.

Al eventually retired as town manager in 1998, but it is safe to say that his legacy will be remembered for years to come, both inside and outside of Windsor. As the interim city manager of Hartford from 2002 to 2005, he helped the city council make significant budget changes that eliminated a $47 million deficit. Additionally, he employed new methods of organization in both Windsor and Hartford that earned him widespread recognition. In a book entitled Self-Directed Work Teams: The New American Challenge, author

*Al Ilg receiving a plaque circa 1990s.

Jack D. Orsburn praised Al for his management strategies and even identified him as the best town manager in the country.

When asked about his thoughts on the role of the government, Al responded – "I've always felt the government is here for [public] service. That really struck me as the heart of what I wanted to do."

Today, Al offers support to students with a similar passion for public administration through the Albert G. Ilg Fellowship in Local Government at the University of Connecticut's School of Public Policy. For over 20 years, this award has encouraged Master of Public Administration students to pursue a career in public service while also honoring Al Ilg's lasting impact on Connecticut.

Society Welcomes its First Student Board Representatives

November 21 was a big night for Windsor High School students S. Skye Raymond and Noah Lappen, and for Windsor Historical Society, as they became the organization's first-ever student members of the Board of Directors. The student board member initiative, led by board member Kaleitha Brown, is intended to bring the voices of Windsor's youth into the Society's decision-making process, and is a vital part of the group's Inclusion Action Plan adopted in 2021.

The Society's student board representatives will serve as full members of the Board of Directors to help shape future programs and activities. "Our board has been working hard over the past few years to better represent the whole Windsor community," says executive director Doug Shipman. "Fortunately, the state of Connecticut does not restrict the age of nonprofit board members except that those under the age of 18 are not permitted to vote on binding contracts. So Skye and Noah will be voting members of our board with only minor limitations, which is consistent with our inclusion and equity focus."

Shown here with their respective board mentors Jim Welsh and Kaleitha Brown, Noah and Skye were appointed by a unanimous vote of the Board of Directors and will serve for one-year terms. "We are thrilled that Skye and Noah have joined our Board of Directors! They bring important perspectives to our organization and we look forward to great things from both of them in the months ahead," notes Kaleitha Brown.

Raymond, a junior, and Lappen, a senior, are both active in various activities at Windsor High School and share a love of history. Raymond expressed her enthusiasm for the opportunity, stating, "I've always been interested in our current and past history. I'm very excited to be working with the Windsor Historical Society and be one of its first Student Representative Board Members." The Society's Inclusion Action Plan and Strategic Plan are available on our website at windsorhistoricalsociety.org.

Many thanks to our volunteers!

We are so grateful to all our volunteers. Between our volunteers, staff, and donors, we are able to accomplish so much more, and even surprise ourselves!

The hits just kept coming! Puritans, Polkas, and Pop: MUSIC IN WINDSOR Exhibit Opening

By Kristen Wands, curator

We are so grateful for the enthusiasm of the guests and performers at our Puritans, Polkas, and Pop: Music in Windsor exhibit opening on the evening of November 16th. Attendees enjoyed time to peruse the exhibit, listen to our custom playlist of exhibit-related hits, and sip some 1960s sock-hop-themed sherbet punch made from Executive Director Doug Shipman's not-so-secret recipe.

Live music by a stellar cast of performers stole the show! Three members of Windsor Fife & Drum Corps played some rousing patriotic tunes and even treated us to a small parade through the gallery. A talented quintet of Windsor High School strings students and their teacher, Dr. Paul Pierce, performed some beautiful orchestral pieces. Windsor High School alum and Connecticut's 17th State Troubadour, Nekita Waller, surprised us with her powerful and emotional a cappella singing. We are so thankful to these performers for donating their time and talents to bring the exhibit opening to life. Our curator Kristen Wands and archivist Michelle Tom were thrilled that several of the visitors were able to identify friends pictured in some of the exhibit photos! We know the staff had fun, and we hope the guests did too. If you missed the opening, you still have plenty of time to view the exhibit. It will be on view in our meeting room for the next year during the museum's open hours.

Chaffee House Improvements

Windsor Historical Society is fortunate to have a strong relationship with the Town of Windsor. Since 1992, the Society has leased the Hezekiah Chaffee House from the town for use as a house museum at the generous rate of one dollar per year. Lease terms stipulate that the Society is responsible for general routine interior and exterior maintenance, while the town maintains the grounds and major exterior repairs and replacements.

Prior to our most recent five-year lease renewal, Town Manager Peter Souza and Assistant Town Buildings Manager Gary Dowgewicz toured the house with Executive Director Doug Shipman and Facilities Coordinator Terence Bagby to inspect conditions that included leaking roof and interior water damage accumulated over several decades. Following the tour, the town agreed to move forward with major replacement work including roof, chimney, gutters, and exterior wood trim to mitigate these conditions and restore the venerable building to its former condition. This badly needed work is an important precursor to any interior repairs that the Society might undertake.

We were pleased to see the chimney and roofing work begin this past spring and continue through the summer months. The town plans to complete brick re-pointing, gutter, and trim work in spring 2023.

The Hayden Station Train Depot

By Michelle Tom, librarian/archivist

Heading up Hayden Station Road from Palisado Avenue, just past the railroad tracks, there is an empty bit of pavement on the right. It's so nondescript that a driver might just think it's a turnaround spot for lost travelers, if they register that it's there at all. That tiny spot was once the site of the train depot for which the Hayden Station neighborhood takes its name.

Originally the area was known as Haydens or Hayden Town, after the Hayden family who settled here starting in the 17th century. Trains first chugged through Windsor in 1844, and by 1855 at least, a station popped up in Haydens, according to a map from that year. We know of no images of this building nor why it was replaced, but in 1875, the New York, New Haven, and Hartford railroad company (NYNH&H) built another depot here (photo 1).

Accessibility to train travel changed the village in subtle ways. Farmers' children could now take jobs in nearby towns or go shopping in Hartford. Neighborhood resident Grace Clapp wrote that city friends were welcomed into the country homes of Hayden Station, and soon "marriages outside of the old families frequently took place and so began a new social era." Unfortunately, the simple yet elegant gable-roofed depot burned down in 1904. It was replaced by the hipped roof station seen in photos 2 and 3.

The neighborhood enjoyed this connectivity to the wider region, but other modes of transportation steadily increased in availability and popularity. By 1951, NYNH&H had reduced their stops at Hayden Station to one southbound train in the morning and one northbound train in the evening, with an average of one passenger embarking and disembarking, before eliminating service there altogether.
